GORDON'S NEW SCHOOL FOR THE PIANO-FORTE

its the result of many years' experience as to the requirements of the best practical teachers of the present time.

In the year 1898, Edward Richardson, a young music teacher just starting in the profession in his youth, published a "New Method for the Piano-forte." The work met with considerable success, being highly praised by the press and teachers. Expanded and revised, the book was published in 1901.

In the year 1898, Mr. Richardson made a further attempt, and brought out his "New Method for the Piano-forte." This time, the work was revised to a greater extent, and the book was published in 1902.

The "New Method for the Piano-forte" is thoroughly revised to a well known number of long and practical experience, under the title of "Gordon's Enlarged Richardson."

"Gordon's Enlarged Richardson."

Thus it will be seen that by constantly keeping pace with the times, the present work, "Gordon's New School," brought out twelve years later than "Gordon's Richardson," and twenty-five years later than "The New Method," containing all the valuable material added in 1901, together with the very best matter as noted to the present requirements of the age, is entirely free from the tedious and "old fashioned" style of a past generation.
